

You're Invited

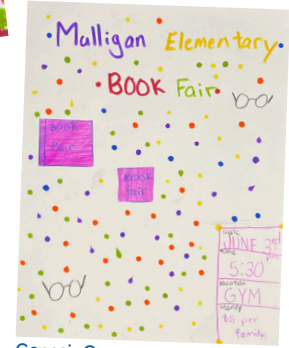

Back to School

RESPOND to the importance of having events at school where families participate in a shared experience. Review your school's calendar to find out when these occasions will take place, and consider how having a handmade invitation could make guests feel welcome and eager to participate in the events.

CONNECT the type of event with how you might creatively invite people. For example, if your school has a Family Night to which only parents/guardians are invited to meet the teachers, what images and words would convey that? If students join Student Progress Conferences to share their work and insights, what might that invitation look like and say? If your school's Welcome Back to School event is a family picnic with siblings and other relatives, how could your invitation show that?

CREATE an invitation for an upcoming event. Use this page as a planning resource where you will organize the information and sketch a draft of what the art and messages might be.

PLAN AND SKETCH A DRAFT OF YOUR INVITATION HERE.

Plan the information you need to include:

- Who is invited?
- What is the event called and what can they expect?
- Why is this event happening?
- Where is the event being held?
- When will the event take place?
(Include the date and start/end time.)

Sketch some ideas for how the invitation will convey the information.

PRESENT your draft invitation to your teacher to confirm the accuracy of the information. Then transform your draft into an actual invitation that you will create on cardstock or thick paper. Deliver it to the people who are invited.
